Barriers to accessing care:

Accessibility • Availability • Acceptability
Affordability • Stigma

Take Action

In the Workplace

Take a critical look at how your workplace environment supports people who speak out when they are struggling. Consider an anonymous survey or other ways to get feedback on how your employees and coworkers would like to be supported.

Consider ways you can work towards a culture of flexibility to encourage people to care of their mental health.

Make resources for emotional health (EAP, public mental health referral sources) universally available, instead of waiting to offer them when someone is having a hard time. Consider adding a mental wellness section to your weekly or monthly news bulletin.

Think about virtual connection. Can your business provide services remotely? It might help your business reach more people in rural locations.

On the Farm

Recognize the stressors. The stress of running a farm can sometimes impact mental wellness. Taking the time to recognize the stresses of being a farmer during a pandemic can really help families cope. Check out this resource: https://nyprojecthope.org/farming-through-the-pandemic/

In Your Community:

Share your story. Most people have struggled with their mental health at some point during their lives. Speaking openly about your own story can help others feel less alone.

Make it normal to ask about mental health. Check in on others who live in your community and ask them directly how they are feeling. Thank them if they decide to share their struggles with you. Don’t try to solve their problems or dismiss their concerns; instead acknowledge their feelings and let them know you hear them.

Reach out. Feeling lonely and isolated can worsen mental health struggles and feeling connected can help. Taking a few minutes to text, call, or drop a card in the mail can make all the difference.

Share the newest mental health resources with those who may need them. There are a lot of new ways to get help, including self-guided therapy apps, online community, and virtual therapy (including text and video). If you have fewer local or regional resources, these can be really helpful.
