Psychological First Aid

What You Can Do to Help

When Disaster Strikes
We often take the regular routines of each day for granted. We may even on occasion complain about how difficult it is to achieve a reasonable balance. But somehow we manage.

As our lives suddenly change, we must deal with so much more than trying to achieve a work-life balance.

Now think about what it would be like to find yourself in the midst of a disaster. How would you ease the burden for yourself and for those around you?

Immediately after the Disaster
Attending to the basic needs of people in distress is essential. This is where Psychological First Aid (PFA) can be helpful. PFA is a way to give emotional support and help to people of any age, ethnic and cultural heritage, and social and economic background in the immediate aftermath of disaster.

Immediate help and support can provide a foundation for recovery. It can also be an important first step in helping people develop coping skills to manage the stress caused by disaster. A person’s reaction to disaster is uniquely his or her own. Therefore, what one person finds helpful may not be the same for someone else. PFA can help provide a supportive environment for people in distress to help them cope with their reactions to disaster.

Then our lives suddenly change. A flood, hurricane, tornado, fire, or school shooting catches us off guard. It doesn’t even have to affect us directly to leave its mark. You realize that you, your family members, friends, colleagues, or people you hardly know, but nevertheless have encountered because of the disaster.

Personal factors, along with the specific circumstances of the disaster will evoke different stress reactions, from you, your family members, friends, colleagues, or people you hardly know, but nevertheless have encountered because of the disaster.

The closer people are to the disaster, one that strikes in their homes, workplaces, or schools, the more likely they are to experience stress reactions

Encourage individuals to engage in physical activities and to combine these activities with useful tasks.

Take care of yourself:

- Get enough rest and eat healthy foods.
- Pay attention to your own stress responses.
- Seek out family and friends for support.
- Try exercising or other physical activity to relieve stress.
- Engage in helpful, productive activities that are satisfying and useful in the situation.
- Follow the advice you would give others.
- Manage your own reaction when faced with emotional outbursts from others by:
  - Remaining quiet and calm.
  - Avoiding the temptation to engage in a shouting match.
  - Acknowledging the person’s point of view.
  - Disengaging and respectfully walking away from the person if you are being insulted or threatened.
  - Contacting law enforcement personnel if you feel that you are in danger.

You may interact with individuals who are experiencing:

- A range of emotions, including shock, grief, sadness, anger, apathy, or mood swings
- Changes in how they think, concentrate, and process information
- Physical symptoms, such as headaches, fatigue, difficulty breathing, or changes in appetite and weight
- Atypical behavior, including outbursts, acts of aggression, or social withdrawal
- Loss of faith in their spiritual beliefs, resulting in the abandonment of rituals and rejection of spiritual care providers

PFA will provide you with basic strategies to help people cope with their pressing concerns and needs in the days and weeks after the disaster. These are also strategies that you can practice for yourself so that you can remain calm, focused, and able to help others.

Reach out to those who need help and provide comfort care.

- Make certain that individuals are safe and out of harm’s way.
- Offer immediate assistance to distressed individuals by looking for ways to keep them comfortable (e.g., providing blankets and water or directing them to a place to sit).
- Let individuals know you are concerned about them and describe how you may be able to help.
- Make eye contact and determine the person’s comfort level with you as a helper. Be aware that some people are not comfortable asking for help.
- Speak slowly and clearly, and in turn, allow the person to speak without interruption.
- Protect the person’s privacy by keeping your conversation from being overheard.
- Avoid making promises you will not be able to keep.
- Provide something for individuals to do; ask teenagers, adults, and older adults to help out where they can.
- Provide an interpreter or translator for individuals when necessary and be sensitive to cultural and ethnic needs.

Validate survivors’ feelings and thoughts.

- Listen and hear what survivors have to say by being fully present and attentive.
- Allow them to talk as little or as much as they care to. Try not to push too hard to get them to talk about what happened or how they are feeling.
- Avoid the temptation to judge the rightness or wrongness of their reactions.
- Remain open to an individual who is challenging his or her belief system.

Recognize basic needs and support problem-solving.

- Help people to find safe and secure shelter.
- Help individuals locate food and water.
- Direct individuals to places where they can wash-up and provide them with clean clothing.
- Be patient, especially with older adults, and be prepared to explain things more than once.
- Arrange activities that will keep children engaged so that parents can complete practical tasks.
- Identify what an individual’s specific needs are and help him or her develop a plan of action.
- Be specific and concrete, and focus on one task at a time.

Provide accurate and timely information.

- Provide accurate information in response to questions as soon as you can.
- Take the time to find an answer to a person’s question.
- Refrain from sharing information that you have not confirmed.

Connect people with their support systems.

- Help survivors to find family members and confirm where their loved ones are located.
- Facilitate your community’s spiritual practices as desired and requested.
- Contact medical professionals who can help with physical conditions and medication needs.
- Make referrals to mental health professionals, especially if individuals exhibit risky or dangerous behaviors or ask to see a counselor.

Provide education about stress responses.

- Help people to understand the stress they may be experiencing in response to the situation will lessen with time.
- Encourage individuals to seek help from a physician or mental health professional.
- Exercise caution that you don’t minimize a person’s reactions.

Reinforce strengths and positive coping strategies.

- Encourage individuals to get back to their routine activities as soon as practical.
- Suggest that individuals choose healthy foods and minimize the amount of junk food they eat.
